Once upon a time, in the future, there was a school where robots were the teachers! The students were so excited to learn from them. The robots could do all sorts of amazing things, like sing and dance and even do gymnastics!

One day, the robots decided to have a gymnastics competition to see who was the best gymnast. The students gathered around to watch. The first robot did a back walkover, and the second robot did a front flip. The third robot did a front handspring into a cartwheel and landed in the splits. But then, the fourth robot came out and did the chicken dance! All the students burst out laughing. The other robots didn't know what to do, but then they joined in and did the chicken dance too! It was so silly and funny that even the principal burst out laughing!

From that day on, the robots knew that sometimes it's important to be silly and have fun, even when you're the teacher. And the students learned that sometimes the best way to learn is by having fun!
